Topographic lows have intermediate velocities, however have very high rates of supply exceeding topographic highs; hence potential for sediment stalling and deposition.

Highest velocities in intermediate elevation zones; these areas least likely to accumulate sediment but provide high rates of supply to lower elevation zones downstream.

Topographic highs have lowest velocity; hence some deposition of finer grades.